Export order tracking

Track each buyer order stage by stage, from cutting to shipment, and meet the deadline.

The buyer asks one question: when?

Exports are growing fast, and 100 new enterprises are being brought into export. Being able to tell a new buyer exactly which stage an order is at is the foundation of trust. B2B platforms worldwide are built on exactly this information.

Facts and global practice

National Statistics Committee

Textile exports in January–September 2026: $2.4 bn, +28.1%. [1]

Textile industry presentation

Plans call for bringing 100 new enterprises into export in 2026. [2]

m.Stock (based on IPO documents)

As of 31.03.2026, the Zetwerk (India) manufacturing platform had 26 own factories and 6,979 suppliers in 26 countries; apparel manufacturing is among its segments. [3]

Inc42

Zilingo offered supply chain tools to fashion manufacturers and was wound up in 2022. [4]

Both the success and the failure of these platforms depended on the reliability of production data.

02 Where the losses occur

Status by phone

An order's stage is found out by phone.

Raw material delays

Fabric or trim delays become known late.

Workshop sequence

Cutting, sewing and packing plans are not linked.

Buyer notification

Buyers are notified of delays late.

How the loss is calculated

Penalties	late orders per month × penalty per order
Air freight	(air freight cost – planned freight cost) per shipment × shipments sent by air per month to save the deadline
Discounts	discounts granted for late delivery per month
Buyer	lost repeat orders per year × value per order

Illustrative calculations; establish the baseline, units and rates during the site assessment. Avoid counting the same loss twice.

03 Solution architecture

The order is visible at every stage

Each stage (raw materials, cutting, sewing, packing, shipment) is closed with a scanner. Deviations from plan are flagged automatically.
